

Patrick McEnerney is Executive Vice President of Freedom Mortgage with responsibility for leading Freedom's latest acquisition, RoundPoint Mortgage Services.

Mr. McEnerney joined Freedom in August of this year after a 14-year career with Deutsche Bank where he held various roles: from Global Head of RMBS Contract Finance to leadership roles on DB's US Regional Management team and in resolving mortgage-related risks stemming from the housing crisis. During his tenure at DB, Pat managed groups responsible for mortgage initiatives around the globe including significant projects in Colombia, Saudi Arabia, the UK and Canada.

Over his 35-year banking career, Pat has held multiple senior management roles in the mortgage banking and banking industries including as President of The Bank of New York Mortgage Company, President of Priceline Mortgage, Executive Vice President of EverBank, and Chief Credit Officer of Participants Trust Company (currently part of DTC).

Pat has also been active in numerous industry boards and nonprofit organizations. He has been an executive committee member of the Financial Services Roundtable's Housing Policy Council. He has also served on numerous organizations focused on the issues of affordable housing, including multiple terms as a Trustee on the board of Enterprise Community Partners, on the advisory board for Neighborhood Housing Services of New York City, and as an advisory board member of The Institute for Affordable Housing Policy at New York University's Furman Center. In addition to involvement on the national level in affordable housing and housing policy, Pat has been involved locally as a business advisory board member to Flagler College in his hometown of St Augustine, Florida.
