

Keith Bickel
Public Policy Executive

KEITH BICKEL is the Senior Vice President, Public Policy Executive focusing on mortgage policy for Bank of America in Washington, D.C. In this role, he monitors mortgage-related policy and regulatory change for the Bank's senior executive team; helps shape and define Bank positions on key mortgage-related issues; and engages with external industry trade groups and policymakers to shape policy options and outcomes.

In addition to his policy work, Keith previously led the Bank's affordable and multi-cultural lending group as the Neighborhood Lending Executive. In this role he was responsible for developing strategies and programs to drive successful homeownership among low-to moderate-income, multicultural and underserved borrowers across the economic spectrum.

Prior to joining the Bank, Keith was chief of staff for the COO at Freddie Mac with responsibility for overseeing their end-to-end technology transformation effort. Previously, he led the corporate strategy group there as well. His prior policy career includes positions held at the White House and Pentagon, as well as several entrepreneurial ventures in the data and technology space.

Keith is a member of the Bank's Hispanic/Latino Executive Council and its HOLA diversity network group and engages in a number of formal internal and external mentorship programs. In his spare time he trains and participates in triathlon and charity bike events, and has a second degree black belt in Taekwondo.

Keith holds both Doctorate and Masters Degrees from Johns Hopkins University and a Bachelors degree from the University of Pennsylvania. He is originally from St. Croix and St. Maarten in the West Indies and currently resides in Washington, DC.
